AMERICA NEEDS A THIRD PARTY!
Now the Big Media says a Third Party is a Good Idea...?
We long as the people who control the media control that third party...

Is Power Elite Planning New Third Party?

POWERFUL FORCES seem to be laying the groundwork for a new political party to rebellion under their control. Don't let them lead good patriotic Americans astray. Here's the story you need to know that you won't read it anywhere else.

By Michael Collins Piper

Certain non-Americans — fed up with corrupt and treasonous politicians in Washington — are encouraging — indeed even to pressure "third" party or independent movement rise up to throw the rascals out and restore the republic to the days of the founders and put an end to centuries imperial state of conquest around the globe.

Ironically, many of these grass-roots Americans do not recognize is that there is — even now — a not-too-covert effort afoot to bring some sort of "third party" into being for the 2012 presidential election. The problem is that those working to conjure up this "new" movement are the very people responsible for the ruin that America is today.

AUNTY MODDOM HAS been busy.

In fact, elements behind the "tea party" scenes — using the self-appointed "spokesmodel" as their megaphone — seem to be setting the stage for a new "third party" movement. Supposedly a "Republican" organization movement on the American right.

Americans will be told that this is the rebellion against the Republican Party establishment playing Washington and that they finally have a "real alternative" to those bickering Democrats and Republicans who've brought misery and malaise to the American system.

The recent rise of a "third" party in Britain — the Liberal Democrats — is cited as a model of successful government in partnership with the Conservative (or "Tory") Party — is being hailed as an example Americans can follow, in the tradition of our so-called "Mother country."

The American people do need an alternative to the two-party system that has long been a fraud, but we need to know that the "solution" being set in place is the real solution at all.

Here's the story, according to a recent board meeting of the Council on Foreign Relations (CFR).

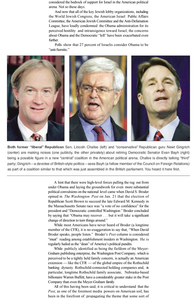
SHANE HARGGET 1999 man behind New Party

The CFR is the New York-based affiliate of the Royal Institute of International Affairs in London, the direct descendant of the Round Table movement founded by those luminaries (each into the legitimate, philanthropic monopoly known as the Federal Reserve System, which has presided over the destruction of the dollar.

Likewise, another power behind the sudden burst of the tea party into national prominence was Fox News, the media operation of Australian-born media mogul Rupert Murdoch, whose ever-rise to international reliance came as a result of the sponsorship of the CFR, which has always been quick to bring "new blood" in various aspects in the author's works The Bohemian Grove and The New Babylon.

While the CFR's involvement in people involved in the tea party, it might be said that there are some suspicious elements at work, utilizing the movement for their own purposes, particularly in the case of Shane Harggett, who appears, in the orchestrated "rollout" of the tea party system. But real reform is not what these intrigants have in mind.

Why, some might ask, would the power elite — the have-benefited from a strongly kilt on the traditional two-party system — want to bring it toppling down?



Billionaire American whistle-dealer Warren Buffett (if Nebraska has been a long-time U.S.-based satellite for the Rothschild banking dynasty, Buffett has been a key player in the Rothschild's U.S. operations, and is helping California Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger. Buffett and the Rothschilds have a substantial controlling interest in the Washington Post publishing empire which is promoting the idea of a new "centrist" political movement and has been building up Sarah Palin as an "alternative" force which they would be happy with in control of the Republican Party. Schwarzenegger is often lauded as a "middle of the road" politician to be emulated and admired.

The answer is simple. The power elite recognize that there is widespread discontent among American voters, and those high-level manipulators want to ensure that they are able to contain and control that discontent. They want to be able to "manage" the crisis, so that means setting up a new "control" party or movement to do it.

At the same time, of course, they want to be certain that they can keep the Democrats in power, and the Republicans out of power unless, making certain that legitimate challenges to politics as usual are kept on the sidelines and marginalized.

The CFR's house organ, the Washington Post and its sister publication, Newsweek, which is now on the auction block, have been promoting the political fortunes of Sarah Palin, advancing her presidential ambitions and her potential role in the GOP.

Mrs. Palin is clearly perceived by the rich interests who control the Post as a "blocking candidate," who has the capacity to frustrate the ambitions of the Republican Party's more "mainstream" figures, whose robust candidacies in a modern American imperial globalist and warmongering is considered a potential danger should he make further advances in the GOP arena.

400 big media and big money "glad" for GOP to Sarah Palin's return to process a "centrist" rebellion in 2012?

So Sarah Palin is clearly being used as a shameless tool. Yet, paradoxically, should Mrs. Palin capture the GOP nod, she would further the elitist aim of saying that the Republican Party was now fully controlled by extremists and that the Democrats, who are the real GOP voice-head huge backing elsewhere for a "centrist" alternative since, of course, most Republicans would find it hard to stomach voting for Barack Obama or any other likely nominee from the Democratic Party.

The point that is little noticed and hardly mentioned regarding the Republican Party's presidential candidacy is the fact that many supporters of Israel oldies. the tightly knit group of Zionists and financial interests who control the major print and broadcast media in America are concerned that there is a growing opposition to Israel within the GOP. Many Republicans, they feel, have apparently demonstrate that Republicans across the country are far more strongly in support of Israel than Democrats, who for many years were the party of choice for those who wished for Israel at the American political arena. Not so these days.

And one fact all of the key Jewish lobby organizations, including the American Israel Public Affairs Committee, the Anti-Defamation Committee, the American Jewish Committee and the Israel Information League, have loudly condemned the Obama administration for its supposed "anti-Israel" policies. Meanwhile, the Republicans — about Obama and the Democratic "left" have been exacerbated even further.

It is clear that 27 percent of Israelis consider Obama to be "anti-Semitic."

Both former "liberal" Republican Sen. Lincoln Chafee (left) and "conservative" Republican guru Newt Gingrich (center) are making noises (one publicly, the other privately) about retiring Democratic Senator Evan Bayh (right) to run as an "Independent." Bayh is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations and a protégé of CFR member Tony Coelho — a devotee of Britain's royals — (see Bayh's article in the summer of the Council on Foreign Relations) as part of a coalition similar to that which was just assembled in the British parliament, has toward it here.

A hint that there were high-level forces pulling the rug out from under Sarah Palin's feet was the fact that many of the most influential political consultants on the national level (once what David E. Broder opined in The Washington Post on Jan. 23 that the election of Republican Scott Brown to the Senate seat in Massachusetts held by the Massachusetts Senate was true "a win of the establishment" for the president and "Democratic-controlled Washington." Broder concluded that Brown's win was a "repudiation" but it will lead to significant change of direction is not things around.

While most Americans have never heard of Broder (a longtime columnist for the Washington Post who has been dubbed by the Broder-speaks, people know "Bradley Effect/others is considered "mad" reading among establishment insiders in Washington. He is widely regarded as the "dean of Washington journalists."

Broder, backed by "dean" of so-being Jon Huntsman (the Mayor-Graham publishing empire, the Washington Post Company, which is perceived to be a tightly held family concern, is actually a American version — like the U.K. — of the global empire of the Rothschild family, which has long controlled the Washington Post Company. In particular, longtime Rothschild family associates, Nebraska-based billionaire Warren Buffett, have a considerable greater stake in the Post than the Graham family itself, it is said.

All of the leaving-have said, it is critical to understand that the Post, as one of the foremost media powers on American soil, has long been in the business of propagating the theme that some sort of "unrest" challenge

Indeed, as long ago as 1992, the Washington Post featured a prominently placed front-entitled "Washington centrist voters" Perot Spurtout texas." The article proclaimed that even in Norcross, Pa.— a suburb of Atlanta, Ga. — "Ross Perot's call for a Washington-based so-called middle-of-the-road or centrist Democratic and Republican alike have always competed on an even level in local, state and federal elections, dogged with partisan pollards in Washington is growing steadily.

The Post asserted that the situation in Norcross is reflected all around the country, and concluded that there was a "hunger" for a "effort "what political strategists consider the deadliest middle."

What this means, effectively, is the similarly crafted code words for the "third party" movement that the Rothschild's Post is promoting and the Republicans to be "no extreme" — the Democrats perceived to be "left wing" and the Republicans to be "no right wing."

Ironically, the Rothschild's Post has long promoted the "left" or "right" politically, the point is that the Post is suggesting, as it has repeatedly in recent months, joined by The New York Times, that there is a growing "centrist" movement in the American electorate.

On May 2, the Post — which heartedness never had anything good to say about relatively larger-scale "independent" or "third party" candidacies — featured a front-page article by Dan Balz and Jon Huchmann in Ralph Nader — featured a lead item in its much-read Sunday opinion section issuing the question: "Should the two-party system be overhauled?"

That the Post would even open up the question for discussion is very telling. While opinions, both pro- and con-, were presented, the fact that the question was being asked at all is significant. Balz, who is a longtime contributor to the Rothschild's mouthpiece in Washington, is a graduate of the University of Southern California's Grad Institute of Politics, reflected precisely the tone of recent and notably regulatory Democratic Party politics.

While Schmitt says that the emergence of a third party is unlikely "anytime soon," he suggests that "angry centrists" have "the best chance to succeed." Balz, who is also a fellow at the Brookings Institute, is hope having the foundation for "the need for a new, centrist political party that will be the country from the grip of liberal and conservative extremists." Balz, who is also a fellow at the Brookings Institute, is political figures could conceivably remake the American political landscape."

Interestingly, Schmitt cites such figures as longtime liberal Sen. Blanche Lincoln (D-Ark.), who is now actively being successfully challenged in her renomination by a candidate perceived to be even more liberal than she is, and Republican Sen. Arlen Specter of Pa. Specter of Pennsylvania, who gave up running for renomination in the GOP primary facing a serious conservative challenge: only to find his own renomination challenged by a more liberal Democrat. Specter, of course, is a longtime contributor to the Rothschild's Post.

And it's probably no coincidence that Schmitt should be one echoing the Post's propaganda line in so many respects. In 2008, Schmitt was the communications director for veteran "maverick" Senator John McCain's presidential campaign. McCain, of course, has been, now having turned as a powerful, philosophizing turning man for Democratic presidential candidate Sen. John Kerry.

Ironically, Schmitt's comments about the "centrist" voters over the years with more "conservative" elements in his views and Balz's — Schmitt has a momentous challenge—from the "right"—from former Sen. Jim DeMint.

What is particularly interesting in that another featured commentator in the Post's give-and-take on the issue was former Sen. Lincoln Chafee (R-R.I.), who is also a target of a third party challenge was "not a public favorite should follow."

What Gingrich did not say, however, was something that Schmitt and Balz would have to be aware of: that Gingrich was also "auditioning" to figure in the capital city's power elite that he is considering picking retiring Democratic Sen. Evan Bayh of Indiana to run as an "Independent" presidential candidate in 2012. Bayh is running mate if he Gingrich manages to pressure the Republican Party's 2012 presidential nomination. This is apparently the "Gingrich Plan" for a third-ticket, same sort of "bipartisan, middle of the road" approach.

Gingrich: Front Man for Shady, Shadowy Interests

PICTURE: Machine Anderson and Larry Silverstein are two powerful Zionist figures who have bankrolled the intrigues of GOP kingpin Newt Gingrich

Former House Speaker Newt Gingrich is still considerably influential in high-level political circles to no small part because of the fact that his substantial political and public relations enterprises have been bankrolled by Machine Anderson, an international gambling tycoon.

Known for his devotion to the interests of Israel, Anderson has been a key figure in Las Vegas where he has been described by the tech sets of Las Americans Israeli Cooperative Enterprise as "the world's richest Jew."

It should also be noted that Gingrich benefited from the lucrative Israeli-connected intrigues of his former wife Marianne Ginther, who died in recent years ago, and who was on the payroll of the Israeli Export Development Company (EXCO), which was responsible for the marketing of Israeli-produced Uzi Israeli products — even as Gingrich was using his influence as a member of Congress to advance U.S. aid to Israel.

The aforementioned EXCO was at an operation run by mob-connected Larry Silverstein, the billionaire developer of the World Trade Center complex who owned the N-1 Uniquik, but known for his new infamous urging — "pull it" — in reference to the trade center's Building 7 on 9/11 — a reference that many believe to that 9-11 researchers have documented scheduled to

And while Gingrich has not yet made any major formal steps toward running for the presidency, he maintains considerable influence among the Republican Party's base.

That Gingrich should nominate Bayh as a possible running mate is very interesting in the context of an orchestrated toppling of the two-party system, which is precisely what the Rothschild's Washington Post media — the global money lords who are the forces dominating the Federal Reserve System.

It is also worth noting that The New York Times, their major voice for the barons of finance, featured a commentary by Bayh entitled "Why I'm Leaving the Senate," in which Bayh complained of "partisan gridlock" and the need for "bipartisan" solutions.

Ironically, Bayh's wife, Susan Bayh, is the daughter of Democratic Senator Birch Bayh, who was the author of the infamous Twenty-fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, which has been used to install Rothschild agents Nelson Rockefeller and Gerald Ford into the White House.

Charles wrote of the fact that, in 2005, political John Zogby told Bayh that a presidential bid in 2008 was a challenging contest that a third party waiting to be formed."

In Charles's summary of Zogby's words, Tribbe party could make a "serious run" at the presidency in 2008 and that "the best time for a third party to fill the vacuum." For his own part, Charles wrote:

With our hopes for a post-partisan era still unmet, I say 'on Scrivener Bayh: Welcome to the club of disaffected Democrats. Now, let's see what we can do. Before long, we centrists may even come together to define the third party that Mr. Zogby foresee in 2001.

Charles's reference to Zogby's 2001 "vision" of a third party can a credible presidential campaign just two years after the attack in founding. Four years later, Abraham Lincoln won the White House with just 39 percent of the popular vote in a United Front Bush can walk away from the United States Senate and not look back, more power to him. But my guess is that he has a modern view of how the American system is ruined.

It may be no coincidence that Bush's name happens to be one of those popping up in the type of scenario discussed here. In 1998 Bush was a member of the Council on Foreign Relations and a prominent member of the Bohemian Grove, the secretive international policymaking power bloc created jointly in the mid-1870s by the Rothschild's London-based Round Table movement and their American satellites in the Rockefeller family network.

In Bush's new island with other key "centrists," who are said to be considering running on a third party ticket in 2012 — a ticket that is not assigned, up by the power elites? That question remains to be answered. But as the exercise of the continuing propaganda campaign to build up Sarah Palin as a viable candidate for media demonstrates, it appears that something is definitely afoot.
